“ Worm was my ex father in law, we had our ups and downs but for the most part, we got along. Hey I was invited to him and Vera's wedding. Best darn Biker wedding I ever went to..Naked by sundown, jk. He was a kind man knew what he was talking about and loved his family! Worm, I will never forget Shane and Is wedding dance, it was the dollar dance, you grabbed me and said. It's time to dance honey, so we danced and it wasn't the 100$ dollar bill you gave me that shocked me, it was the way you shoved it down the front of my wedding dress. Never a dull moment with you! Worm, your home with Vera now, Grandma is there with coffee and a meal, you are healed. RIP fella. You fought a good fight. Love ya Lonnie, you were a good one!

“ Though we have not been in touch, I still remember the days when we were neighbors and the times we had. Like Lonnie's (Worm's) first motorcycle. His parents bought it for him before he turned 16. I was a few months old and already had my driver's license. Worm only had his learner's permit. So, he took me riding with him ... only because "it made him legal"! License driver and all, not because "Hank" look good on the back of his new bike!!!! I still wonder if Worm still ended up with scares from my claw marks? He dumped me off the back of the bike when he took a jump (I was not expecting) and I fell off the back of the bike, catching my foot and getting drug a short distance. Funny, how it was funny afterwards because nothing was broke and we both lived through it. Worm probably was hurt the worse (with my fingernail claw marks on both rib cages as I tired to hang on with all I had). BUT Worm was tough and acted like it did not even hurt. You know how he was.

Even when we got in trouble in school for talking in class. There were times I thought he was just nice to me because I helped him get through math classes. But he was always kind to me ... in a way that seems to be lost on the younger generation. Never bullied me. Never teased me about being the fat girl.

Worm seemed to have rough edges, but many, many years ago, he was still always the good guy; good friend; and kind sole.
