“ Oh Trevor. It's so difficult to believe this could be true. I remember Juan and I living next to you when you were little. You were such a little brat. We used to laugh as your grandma tried to corral you and you would shoot her the evil little grin and run a little more. We lost contact with you for so many years until I ran into you at Sears and didn't realize who you were. You'd grown up so tall since I'd last seen you but once you recognized me and told me who you were, I could see the same evil little grin when you smiled. I have no doubt that you touched so many people with your ability to make people feel important and safe. I've been reading so many comments and getting to know who you were during those years I hadn't seen you. Sounds like you really grew up into a great young man. I'm sure your mom and grandma are so proud of you. We'll miss you Trevor. You had so much life left to live. But I know now that you are relaxing, looking down on everyone being their guardian angels. RIP buddy.
